In a BND interrogation an asylum seeker said that Iraq was developing biological weapons. His statements were false but relevant in terms of intelligence. The BND passed the information along to the US, which used it in 2003 as grounds for attacking Iraq. The asylum seeker was given the codename Curveball and worked at the ad agency Thiele und Friedrichs Marketing GbR, a front company of the BND.

The weather instruments in front of the building are fenced in like a compound. Behind the reflective façades are several offices of the BND. The "Federal Property Management Division, Special Assets" is one of the main covers of BND employees, which they also report as their employer to the tax office. The "Garner Foundation" finances recruited students and assists apprehended BND employees. The "Medical and Social Service for Federal Agencies" treats incapacitated agents. The "Military District Administration South – Branch Office Munich" is presumably a main office of the Military Counterintelligence Service. The "Office for Foreign Issues" is an outpost whose directorate was connected around the year 2000 to language recognition projects (SENSUS software for Europol).

The surveillance commando QB30 of the BND operates two disguised radio stations with the cover names Saturn and Mercury. The radio relay stations are housed in the northern bell tower of Munich's Frauenkirche. An official inquiry into this matter by Public Art Munich was answered by the press office of the archdiocesan chancery on 2 March 2018: "Nothing about an entity named QB30 of the BND is known to us."

The CIA listed Gloria Film Distributor as a front company of the German Intelligence Service (Org). Gloria's domestic films, like the series "08/15" ran successfully until they were eclipsed by the New German Cinema. The Gloria Film Palace is located across from the Palace of Justice.

Agents who lose their security clearance, for example through alcoholism or gambling, become members of the Coalition of the Unable (internal BND designation). In order not to lose them to hostile intelligence services as informants they continue to be paid and are assigned to the analysis of "freely available material" such as listening in on radio transmissions.

According to the CIA the South America department of the Rodenstock Optical Works was an informant of the Gehlen Organization. In the 1920s the company manufactured camera lenses, and then telescopic sights for the tanks of the Nazi regime. The BND uses flower names to refer internally to the intelligence agencies of other countries. The dandelion is not included in this "Fleurop List."

Heidrun Hofer fell in love with Hans Puschke in Paris. He introduced himself to the radical right-wing BND secretary as a member of the die-hard Nazi organization "Überlebensträger." She disclosed BND secrets to him about NATO operations. "Hans Puschke" was a Russian "Romeo" agent and the die-hard Nazi organization "Überlebensträger" with its main office in South America was an invention of the KGB. Heidrun Hofer also made the acquaintance of the Überlebensträger chairman "Baron von Hohenstein." The Academy Bookstore did not sell books. It was a bogus company of the German Intelligence Service (Org). The company's close physical proximity to the art academy, and the art academy's remoteness at the time from theory, ensured that the code name "Akademie Buchhandlung" was difficult to crack.
